

EXHIBITIONS Agneta Ekholm Unfold 25th August 2015 - 19th September 2015

As non-objective abstraction celebrates its centenary, its offspring have become the ultimate shape-shifters embracing everything from the purity of all-white canvases through to vast webs of gestural paint, with many patterns and grids in between. It has been at the forefront of Modernist theory (courtesy of Greenberg, Donald Judd and Rosalind Krauss), the boot-boy for the cynical ironies of Post-Modernism, and now –full circle – finds itself at the core of Metamodernism. It was also the herald chosen to launch the new building of the National Gallery of Victoria almost fifty years ago. Yet in spite of this rich history, abstraction's reception in Australia has always been more grudging than the otherwise easy consumption of illusionary realism. Luckily, such hindrance is of little consequence to its creators and devotees.

One of these is Agneta Ekholm. Her training encompasses the rigour of the Finnish art school system (which had core electives in stretcher building and the making of watercolours) before further research as a student in Melbourne. What this alludes to is that materiality and structure in a painting are as crucial for Ekholm as is the final resolution. And here, it should be pointed out that even though her paintings have their roots in post-war Modernism, they are more accurately informed by the tenets of Formalism. 'In the classic modernist trajectory abstract work was meant to work through to a final essence or truth and expire.¹ (my italics) This is the nihilist contradiction that lurks within the argument for if the end is reached, what is left but mere replication? Formalism, by comparison, analyses and compares form and style – the way objects are made and their purely visual aspects. It emphasises compositional elements such as color, line, shape, texture. In Ekholm's work, we find faint echoes of artists such as Pierre Soulages, Morris Louis or Helen Frankenthaler but we also find the emphatic presence of Ekholm herself, her mastery of tone, her distinctive application of paint, her celebration of colour and her innate understanding of form.

Agneta Ekholm
Slipstream 2015
acrylic on canvas
160cm x 190cm

Agneta Ekholm
Reservoir 2015
acrylic on canvas
122cm x 135cm

Bearing meditative titles such as Slipstream, Winter Reflections and Reveal, Ekholm's current paintings comprise subdued blues and greens augmented by muted oxide yellow. Patches of bare canvas are also left revealed and it is visual punctuations like these that signal her technical prowess. For any canvas to be left raw at the painting's conclusion, it must be left raw for the whole journey of creation. This is a delicate balancing act yet Ekholm uses no preparatory drawing as an armature to guide her strokes, the process being entirely intuitive instead. Such is her control after two decades of dedicated painting that Ekholm knows instinctively when the canvas should remain bare. She eschews brushes for sharp edged sponges and applies solid paint before she removes it again. Thus, it is reductive painting rather than accumulative. It allows for the retention of crisp edges whilst supporting muted, even distressed, surfaces as the paint is stripped back to reveal the linen's weft and weave. Such precise technique is not gauche trickery nor simply an artist's schtick, for the visual tension that such a strategy of absence creates within a painterly field is just as riveting as any overwrought gestural slab of pigment.

Ekholm's paintings in Unfold are composed, resolute and masterly. They demonstrate a steady progression from her last exhibition at Flinders Lane Gallery in 2013 and, above all, reveal an artist at the top of her game.

¹ Catherine Lumby, 'Abstraction from the '60s to the '80s and back again', West magazine, vol. 3, no. 2, 1991, p.8.

Essay by Andrew Gaynor 2015

Agneta Ekholm has been a finalist in the Calleen Art Award for the past five years (2010-2015), and in 2013 was a finalist in both the Wilson Visual Art Award, and also the Fleurieu Art Prize - the world's richest landscape painting prize. In 2012 Ekholm was also a finalist in the Mount Eyre Art Prize, Fischer's Ghost Art Award and the Redland Art Award. She recently

Agneta Ekholm
Penumbra 2015
acrylic on canvas
85cm x 150cm

Agneta Ekholm
Unfold 2015
acrylic on canvas
85cm x 150cm

Agneta Ekholm
Embark 2015
acrylic on canvas
85cm x 150cm

completed a major commission for the newly opened Mandarin Oriental Hotel in Guangzhou, China, and her works are held in major public and private collections nationally and internationally, including the Embassy of Finland (Australia), Sony Music Corporation, Google (USA) and Rydges Hotel Group.

This will be her second solo exhibition with FLG.

AGNETA EKHOLM PROFILE
DOWNLOAD BIO / CV \(PDF\)

JOIN OUR MAILING LIST

Agneta Ekholm
Drift 2015
acrylic on canvas
150cm x 180cm

Agneta Ekholm
Winter Reflections 2015
acrylic on canvas
100cm x 170cm

Agneta Ekholm
Reveal 2015
acrylic on canvas
100cm x 70cm